Story highlights AT&T on Sunday will deploy more than 20 new network elements Enlarge Image/AP) TWC is "an indispensable tool" for law enforcement, the company says AT&T wants to use its spectrum to make more smartphones for consumers The Federal Communications Commission wants to give AT&T more spectrum for wireless broadband, but the company objects, saying it'd rather have the land where it gets its spectrum to create more cellphone towers. AT&T on Sunday will deploy more than 20 new network elements to wire fiber in cities in New York, California, Kansas and other places, and expand its spectrum holdings. "We're using it to enhance our data network to support more smartphones and tablets in the existing footprint," AT&T spokesman Walter Morris told CNN. AT&T said those network upgrades are "an important part of the company's transition to a mobile-first network," a phrase it coined to argue that it shouldn't be penalized for having too much spectrum. "Our goal is to use the spectrum we have more efficiently than we have in the past, and to make sure that we have more spectrum for mobile broadband than we 09e8f5149f
