"In the first phase, the government will give Rs 1,40,000 crore for the development of an implementation plan, while Rs 1,40,000 crore will be spent in the second phase for the completion of the process," he said. Earlier, the government had hoped that the nation would witness smooth rollout of the Real Estate Regulation Bill (RERA) by the end of its current term in 2019. With the Lok Sabha elections around the corner, the Finance Minister Arun Jaitley had already announced that there would be no further extension to the tenure of the current government and the RERA will be allowed to run till the end of its term. The new government has also appointed a team of secretaries to oversee the actual implementation of the regulation. RERA is a live-streaming website which has over 15 crore registered users to date. The website will hold complete details of building buyers, builders and developers, providing them with the necessary information to complete transactions. The new website will also have the unique facility of a single point of contact for policy and redressal of complaints, making sure that the process is transparent and there are no discrepancies.1.
