Q: What is the most efficient way to extract numbers from a vector in C++? I have a large std::vector with a lot of information stored inside, each one of them is potentially made up of many numbers separated by ",". I'm trying to extract each of these numbers as a double. The vector will only contain numbers so I have a hard time just converting the whole thing to a std::string and doing regex on each std::string. How can I do this efficiently?

A: There are a variety of ways to do this, the easiest I can think of at the moment is:

#include <string>
#include <vector>
#include <stringstream>
int main() { std::vector test = {"1,2,3,4", "5,6,7,8"}; std::vector out; auto v = std::find_if(test.begin(), test.end(), [](std::string const& s) -> bool { return std::isdigit(s[0]); }); while(v!= test.end()){ double value; std::stringstream ss; ss > value; out.push_back(value); v = std::find_if(v + 1, test.end(), [](std::string const& s)
```
